Many people and institutions helped me write this book, and I am deeply grateful for their support. My first and largest debt is to the residents of the Muslim district, whose contribution to this work is manifest on every page. These few words can only begin to represent the gratitude and appreciation that I feel for the many friends who gave me so much. Among them, I would especially like to acknowledge the generosity and friendship of the Ma, Sheng, and Wa families. In addition, Feng Zenglie of the Shaanxi Education Institute freely shared his knowledge, thoughts, and hospitality with me until his death in 1996. Ma Jishu, ahong at the Small Mosque, also gave me much detailed information and many wise words during the five years that we were friends before his death in 1999. I miss both these men very much. Ma Liangxun, vice-director of the Nationalities and Religious Affairs Commission of Shaanxi Province, has been a wonderful intellectual sparring partner and source of information. Wang Yarong, Lian Zengxiu, and Li Li’an of the Shaanxi Academy of Social Sciences took the (not inconsiderable) trouble to host me as a foreign scholar and greatly facilitated my work. I would also like to thank Yunxiang Yan of the University of California at Los Angeles and Tian Changshan of the Shaanxi Daily for their help in setting up my field site in Xi’an.

My research was first written as a dissertation under the guidance of James L. (Woody) Watson, Rubie S. Watson, and Mary M. Steedly, all of Harvard University, and Jonathan N. Lipman of Mount Holyoke College. I have benefited greatly from their knowledge, critiques, and friendship. Woody and Jonathan in particular have been among my most enthusiastic supporters, going far beyond the line of duty in giving me detailed comments, ideas, and moral support. Pam Summa read, edited, and made suggestions about multiple drafts of this work, helping me to express my ideas more clearly and to see the humor in this process. Jun Jing of City College New York and Eriberto P. (Fuji) Lozada of Butler University gave close readings to portions of this book and helped me refine my ideas. At Haverford, I have received helpful intellectual prodding from my departmental colleagues Wyatt MacGaffey and Laurie Kain Hart, both of whom read and commented upon parts of this work and gave me stimulating work of their own to read. Mark Gould of Haverford’s Department of Sociology read and critiqued the entire book, in some cases offering comments on multiple drafts. I have benefited enormously from his unerring ability to find the hole in the argument. James A. Millward of Georgetown University as one of the reviewers for Stanford University Press offered detailed suggestions and helpful criticisms that I found very useful indeed. I am also grateful for the comments of one anonymous reviewer.

Funding for research and writing came from the Committee on Scholarly Communication with China, Haverford College, the Luce Foundation through a grant administered by the Fairbank Center for East Asian Research, the Cora Du Bois Charitable Trust, Foreign Language Area Scholarship, the Mellon Foundation, Sigma Xi, NCR, and the Harvard Anthropology Department. Portions of Chapter 7 were first published in The Consumer Revolution in Urban China, edited by Deborah Davis (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1999), and parts of Chapters 4 and 5 appear in Feeding China’s Little Emperors, edited by Jun Jung (Stanford: Stanford University Press, 2000). I would like to acknowledge the logistical and technical assistance of Kathy McGee and Lisa Gavioli (Haverford ’99). Finally, I am also grateful for the capable editing of Julie DuSablon for Stanford University Press.

M.B.G.
Men make their own history, but they do not make it just as they please; they do not make it under circumstances chosen by themselves, but under circumstances directly encountered, given and transmitted from the past.

—Karl Marx, The 18th Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte
CONTENTS

List of Illustrations  xi

CHAPTER ONE
- Modernization and Consumption  1

CHAPTER TWO
- Housing, Education, and Race  22

CHAPTER THREE
- Mosques, Qur'anic Education, and Arabization  68

CHAPTER FOUR
- Traditional Food and Race  114

CHAPTER FIVE
- Factory Food, Modernization, and Race  145

CHAPTER SIX
- Alcohol and "Building a Civilized Society"  167

CHAPTER SEVEN
- Wedding Gowns and Modernization  192

CHAPTER EIGHT
- Consumption and Modernization  221

Appendix  237
Character List  241
Notes  245
Bibliography  253
Index  269
ILLUSTRATIONS

MAPS

China xiv
The Hui quarter in Xi'an 34

CHARTS

Chart 1. Small Mosque income and expenditures 87
Chart 2. Xue's wedding attire expenses 214

FIGURES

1. A bicycle cart vendor sells food on one of the quarter's street markets 24
2. An alleyway in the quarter, decorated for the Feast of the Breaking of the Fast 26
3. A "level house" (ping fang) 32
4. Tombstones adorned with Arabic calligraphy and images 51
5. The "Hui food and drink street" gate on Barley Market Street 56
6. Construction of the New Mosque 70
7. Inside the worship hall of the Small Mosque 72
8. The minaret of the Big Study Street Mosque 74
9. A syncretic mosque: the Middle Mosque 75
10. The Dapiyuan Mosque and madresseh behind it 94
11. A roof tile from the Great Mosque 97
12. Photograph of jingtang jiaoyu text 105
13. Making meirimei soup 139
14. Youxiang funeral cakes 140
15. Peng 148
16. Young man rolling noodles 157
17. Antialcohol committee rally on Barley Market Street 182
18. Yan during the second day of the wedding ritual 197
19. Xue, freshly made up for her wedding 202
20. Yan’s aunt trying on Yan’s wedding gown 210
Between Mecca and Beijing
Modernization and Consumption Among Urban Chinese Muslims
MARIS BOYD GILLETTE

"For Muslims in China, eating is a political act, and this book, the most detailed and comprehensive study of a Muslim community in China to date, explains why. In a society that views pork and secularism as the norm, to be a Muslim can be a challenging if not impossible endeavor. The book shows how a small minority can survive and maintain its values in the face of frequent intolerance by the dominant culture. It also translates the fascinating details of the lives of Chinese Muslims into larger modern problems facing communities across the globe."

—Dru C. Gladney, Asia-Pacific Center

Between Mecca and Beijing examines how a community of urban Chinese Muslims uses consumption to position its members more favorably within the Chinese government’s official paradigm for development. Residents of the old Muslim district in the ancient Chinese capital of Xi’an belong to an official minority (the Hui nationality) that has been classified by the state as "backward" in comparison to China’s majority (Han) population. Though these Hui urbanites, like the vast majority of Chinese citizens, accept the assumptions about social evolution upon which such labels are based, they actively reject the official characterization of themselves as less civilized and modern than the Han majority.

(continued on back flap)

By selectively consuming goods and adopting fashions they regard as modern and non-Chinese—which include commodities and styles from both the West and the Muslim world—these Chinese Muslims seek to demonstrate that they are capable of modernizing without the guidance or assistance of the state. In so doing, they challenge one of the fundamental roles the Chinese Communist government has claimed for itself, that of guide and purveyor of modernity. Through a detailed study of the daily life—eating habits, dress styles, housing, marriage and death rituals, religious practices, education, family organization—of the Hui inhabitants of Xi’an, the author explores the effects of a state-sponsored ideology of progress on an urban Chinese Muslim neighborhood.

Maris Boyd Gillette is Assistant Professor of Anthropology at Haverford College.

Jacket photos by Maris Boyd Gillette
Front: Bicycle-cart food vendor, Xi’an
Back: Dapiyuan Women’s Mosque, Xi’an
Of Related Interest

Feeding China’s Little Emperors
Food, Children, and Social Change
EDITED BY JUN JING
2000. Paper and cloth

Golden Arches East
McDonald’s in East Asia
EDITED BY JAMES L. WATSON
1997. Paper and cloth

STANFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
www.sup.org

ISBN 0-8047-3694-4