PREFACE AND INTRODUCTION

The story of this book — exchange of letters between the Muslim World League in Mecca El-Mukarrama and the Religious Administration of the Central Asian and Kazakhstan Muslims on an Islamic conference to deal with "Imam Bukhari and the Modern Age" — letter by the Preparatory Committee and agenda of the conference — the position taken by Saudi Arabia and the League on a conference held in the Soviet Union: distinction between the Soviet Union (as a state) and subversive communism (as a party).

The decision of the League's Secretary-General to participate — exchange of letters of thanks and appreciation for the success of the conference between the Muslim World League and the Muslims of the Soviet Union — request for scholarships to be awarded to Central Asian Muslims — strengthening of Islamic brotherhood and Islamic solidarity.

CHAPTER I

Page 1-10

On the road to Moscow — from Moscow to Samarkand — sessions of the Conference on Imam Bukhari — Arabic language at the Conference — my statement to the conference — the impact of the participation by the Muslim World League in the conference on Muslims of the Soviet Union — the Mosque of Khawaja Zoud Murad — the Opera House of Samarkand — attachment of Soviet Muslims to Mecca El-Mukarrama — Chairmen of Muslim delegations commend and express pleasure at the participation of the League in the conference — in the Mosque of Khawaja Awar — the final meeting of the conference — our observations on the final communique and their acceptance — a dialogue with Soviet journalists — names of members of delegations.

CHAPTER II

Text of conference resolutions as appeared in the final communique.

CHAPTER III

Page 37-64

Muslims of the Soviet Union before and after communism — in ancient and contemporary history — the rebellion of Prince Shamel and its frustration — the execution of the Muslim Prince of the Tartars (Ali Ougli in 1937) — displacement of millions of Soviet Muslims — one third of Soviet territory is Muslim — number of Soviet Muslim population as a percentage of total Soviet population — number of Muslims decreasing gradually — variations in the adherence to religion by old and young — communism: a step-child of Zionism — a Muslim youth who loves God and then Lenin — Soviet Muslims sympathize with one another — they pray, fast, collect zakat and pay for their own religious affairs — the exact number of Muslims unknown — names, customs, food and dress — printing of the Ottoman edition of the Quran — Muslim graves — religious education — language and dialects of the various nationalities — administrative divisions of the Religious Affairs Administration — Islamic republics of the Soviet Union — mosques and schools — Islamic conferences — a hope, a request and an appeal — an interesting act of diplomacy concerning visas and passports.

CHAPTER IV

Participation by the Muslim World League in the conference and the wide echoes of that participation at the world informational level — the Sunday Times stunned by the League's participation — world press ignorant of Saudi Arabian policy which distinguishes between the communist party and the Soviet state — policy of the late King Faisal,

H.M. King Khaled and H.H. Prince Fahad as seen by world press — Saudi Arabia and Soviet bigotry — Russian of the kiron curtain is the bigot, not Islam and the Muslims.

CHAPTER V
